FRENCH AND GERMAN BRIDES SING DEFIANCE

Colonel in Charge of Transport With U. S. Soldiers Says It's a Hard Life.

Six hundred and two soldiers of the army of occupation arrived at New York recently on the army transport Centagay, which docked at Pier 2, army base, South Brooklyn. Of this number 75 had contracted wives. There were 12 French brides, 63 German brides and 30 babies. The French women and German women hated each other on sight. It was an interesting voyage, and it is remarkable that no one was hurt.

The entire trip was just one patriotic song after another. As soon as the French women found they were to be associated with Germans, they started to sing the "Marseillaise," just to see what the effect would be and to show how they felt about it. The result was a burst of "Die Wacht am Rhein." There and then Col. G. L. Cress, troop commander, began to devote himself to the maintenance of peace.

So the voyage resolved itself into a song fight. Every time a French bride and a German bride met there was sure to be singing of a patriotic sort. They would cast mean looks at each other for a time and then, as an outlet for their boiling emotions, would come a couple of national anthems.

The tumult was especially concerted at meal times, when "The Star-Spangled Banner" would be thrown in for good luck, and half a dozen American nurses with Irish proclivities would chime in thereafter with "Ireland must be free." Then the 36 babies would begin to cry, and 36 fathers would begin to swear.

The baby chorus was all German. The waiters were big, fat youngsters with red cheeks and powerful lungs. The French brides did not have even a single baby.

According to the soldiers, the attitude of the brides is typical of the French and German nations. They said that Germany harbored no animosity toward England and America, but that she still hated France, and France returned the sentiment.

RACE SUICIDE TO KILL OFF RATS

British Zoo Director Says Present Methods Are Wrong.

WOULD KILL ONLY FEMALES

Then the Males Will Fight Each Other and Eventually Destroy the Breed—Four Males and Six Females, Given Sufficient Food, Will Increase to 170,000 Males and 120,000 Females Within Two Years—Proven by Denmark's Experiences.

Great Britain's strenuous efforts, during the National Rat week just closed, to destroy the rodents said to have been responsible for the destruction of $140,000,000 worth of food last year, are pronounced by an English scientist to be completely and exactly wrong.

According to this authority, the ministry of health in encouraging the wholesale and indiscriminate slaughter of rats in the British Isles is merely improving living conditions for the survivors, whose progeny in less than a year will be as populous as before. There is only one way to rid the world of rats, says this man, and that is to appeal to biological laws, to upset the numerical proportions, between the sexes and then leave the males to destroy their own race.

This advocate of sexual selection in place of rat poison is Director George Jonsson of the Manchester Zoological Gardens, who, in a recent appeal to the sanitary authorities of England, says:

Can't Kill Them All.

"When one realizes the enormous fecundity of rats—a fecundity so great that four males and six females, given sufficient food, will increase to 170,000 females and 120,000 males within two years—it becomes apparent that hit-or-miss methods will never work. You can't kill them all by human efforts and if you let a single pair escape you will have presently the same swarms as before.

"These rat crusades are all wrong. As everybody knows, the male rat is the bolder, the one who roves abroad recklessly, and he is the one who is caught in these indiscriminate attacks. This decrease in the male means more food and more quiet for the females who, undisturbed, breed prolifically and soon restore the number.

"Denmark's experience proves this completely. Denmark began in 1907 the policy of the indiscriminate killing of rats. She had a most elaborate and efficient system. In 1907 she killed 184,000 rats, the vast majority of whom were males. But eight years later, with the system still in force, she killed 189,000 rats! She had made no headway whatever. To be sure, she killed only 38,000 last year, but that decrease—as she admits herself—is due to the food famine conditions prevailing there during the war.

"The only scientific course is to turn your back resolutely on this indiscriminate slaughter and deliberately upset the balance of the sexes. Rat poison should be forbidden. Likewise shooting rats, or catching them in spring traps that kill them. The thing to do is to catch them alive in traps or trap rooms, examine them, destroy the females and turn the males loose.

Destroy the Race.

"That may sound like a fantastic suggestion, but every experienced English game keeper follows exactly the same procedure when he wants to increase or decrease game on a preserve. Ordinarily there are, as we know, two male rats to every three females. If you disturb this balance, so that there are two males to every female, you destroy the race, first by setting the males against each other and secondly by forcing them to harem the does in the breeding season.

"We have been following this method now for some years in the Zoological Gardens. In 1915, when we began, we caught, on an average, 35 rats a month. By destroying the females and releasing the males, we have now cut the population down visibly; we now catch only about 18 rats a month.

"America has afforded biologists a striking example, all unintentionally, of the success of this method. I refer to the total destruction of the passenger pigeon in America. At one time the flocks numbered hundreds of thousands, but hunters, setting themselves to catch the female while on her nest in the breeding season, upset the balance and in a few decades completely destroyed the species.

"Ratlers of Melbourne, Australia, is trying to persuade the people of that continent to follow this method in attacking the rabbit pest, which, in spite of all efforts, is growing worse each year. Every new settler increases the food supply and multiplies the number of rabbits. The waste in money is $100,000,000 a year and increasing yearly. The rabbits are poisoned and trapped and shot in such huge numbers that blowflies infest the air in certain seasons. But it is hopeless. The Australians can make no headway until they enlist sexual selection on their side, kill all the females, release the males and set the latter to destroy the breed.

England's crusade against rats dates from the passage of the rat act of 1919, which makes a householdier who "harbors" rats or mice liable to a fine of $50.

HUMAN HAIR IN CARGO

There is Great Scarcity of This Article in Demand in the U. S.

An item in the cargo of the Hinkata Maru which arrived at Seattle recently was 40 bales of human hair. There is a great scarcity of this article and a demand for it in the manufacture of hair nets. The United States annually imports hair to the value of more than $500,000.

Human hair 25 to 35 inches long and packed in bales of 133 pounds is worth $210 in Hongkong and twice as much in this land.

It is said there are immense stores of this article held in China, as it is accumulated four or five years ago following the edict regarding the abolition of the queue. Many of the long braids of black strong hair were laid away as relics, but the bulk of the clippings found their way into the hands of jobbers, who are now marketing it in this country.
